1900.	Pages.					Rs. A. P.
Sept. 12th	132	12mo dy	1st...	750	Printed.	.....	.....	Professes to be based on Sheridan's Pizarro and relates the story of a war between the Rathores of Kanauj and the Chauhans of Delhi over the possession of a secret treasure of gold. The Chauhans prevailed ultimately and the Rathores were defeated and their General Rimal killed. Ramá, after whom the book is named, was the mistress of Rimal, who was attracted to him by his military fame. But his unjust war on the Chauhans and his cruel and heartless conduct towards his enemies, specially to his former comrade and disciple in arms, Samarshi, converted her love and admiration into hatred and contempt. Her good-natured appeal to his mercy on behalf of Samarshi was set down to the influence of unbalanced passion and rejected with derision. She took this affront to heart and vowed vengeance on him, and did her best to aid the cause of the enemy. After Rimal's death she committed suicide. Her character, as well as, those of the cruel, but brave Rimal, and the heroic and chivalrous Ajit Sinha have been drawn with considerable skill. The language of the book is fairly good.	474

" 25th	192	12mo dy	1st...	250	ditto ...	0 12 0	.....	Is an historical drama based on Tod's account of Rana Sanga's defeat by Bábar through the defection of Siláditya, a feudatory of the Rana. Considerable skill is shown in the delineation of many of the characters, specially, Amara Sinha, the Commander-in-chief of Mewar, Chhaya, daughter of Siláditya, and Prabhá, the devoted wife of the faithless Chhandavar, son of Siláditya. Many of the sentiments put in to the mouth of Chhaya seem to have been borrowed from Shakespeare. The book is fairly well written.	481

" 22nd	322	12mo dy	1st...	1,000	ditto...	0 4 0	The author, 86, Ahiritola Street, Calcutta.	Purports to be a sequel to Bankim Chandra Chatterji's Devī Chaudhurānī , and narrates the after-life of the dacoit-leader disbanded his gang and tried for a time to live as an ascetic. But he soon discovered his unsuitness for the new life and reverted once more to his old habits of daring and activity. He was fairly successful in reconstructing his gang, and in dispersing that of his rival Visvanāth, whom he took captive and kept confined in his hiding-place. But the faithlessness displayed at this juncture by some of his most trusted followers so disgusted him that he once more disbanded his gang and gave himself up to the authorities. Rescued from their hands by his guru he starved himself to death on the bank of the Ganges. The conclusion of the story is thus abrupt, and there is nothing specially to recommend either in the plot or in its development.	49

1900.	Pages.					Rs. A. P.
Aug. 2nd	510	12mo dy	1st...	1,000	Printed.	1 4 0	The author, Rádurbágn, Calcutta.	Is a story of domestic life showing the blending of three distinct types of character in the person of the heroine Yogamáyá. Her father was a Sivait, brother	516
a Vaishnava, and father-in-law a Naiyáyika, and all three had their prototype in the girl. There is nothing remarkable about the plot, which is an account of the fortunes of two Bráhma families of Navadvípa, at a time when Chaitanyaism, was still a permanent factor in society. It had then lost much of its aggressiveness, and given rise to characters like Sripati Nyáyaratna and Siddhesvara Siromani of the story, who represented a harmonious blending of Saivism and Vaishnavism. Siddhesvara and his son Visvarúpa are fine specimens of a Sivait and a Vaishnav respectively, while Satyavati represents all that is good in the Hindu ideal of a woman, both a wife and a mother. The servant couple Kevalarám and Santá, and the orphan-boy Smritidhar are very cleverly drawn. The language of the book is fairly good, though not free from instances of slips in grammar and spelling.
Aug. 4th	356	8vo rl	1st...	1,000	ditto ...	2 8 0	.....	This Volume is, as the title implies, devoted exclusively to Brahmins, and gives the history of the old Gauriya , Saptasatí and Rátri Brahmins. It has a learned introduction discussing the origin of the Hindu Caste system. The question of the first advent of Brahmins in Bengal forms the subject matter of a separate chapter and is very interesting reading. The chronology of Adisúra, who is said to have invited five Brahmins from Kanauj is discussed at a greater length and with truer critical insight than in any other previous writing on the subject. On the whole, the volume is the result of much industry and patient research and is written in good Bengali.	517

Purports to be an account of the migration to India down to present times, with special reference to their religious and social institutions and the changes brought about in the same, by the exigency of their political situation. The influence of Western education on the Hindu Society* of the present day is pronounced to be distinctly harmful and the establishment of a Hindu religious Association is advocated as a means of combating that influence and fostering a spirit of nationality and brotherhood among the different sections of the Hindus. The book is very indifferently written and is full of grave historical and other errors.	520 with a view to proving the substantial identity of the two languages. The phonetic principles which regulate the passage of words from Sanskrit into Bengali and other Prakrits are clearly stated, while the chapter on the deduction of Bengali case-suffixes and verbal forms from Sanskrit discloses a true philological insight on the part of the author. Although not free from hasty generalisations, the book is a gain to the cause of Bengali philology.

Mahábhárata with a view to determining their supposed spiritual import, an analysis of the poetry of Bhárata Chandra and Rámprasad Sen, an attempt at showing that the frame work of the Bengali Hindu Society is essentially religious, and a discourse on the means of attaining spiritual life as explained in the Sástras and implied in the daily religious routine of the people. The writer is no friend of English education, and the book is intended as a corrective to the alleged baneful influences of that education. The chapters of the book dealing with the two epics, which aim at proving their metaphorical character and which discuss in detail the nature and import of the metaphors are extremely unsatisfactory and abound in silly common-places supported with bad logic and false generalisation. The estimate of the poetry of the two early Bengali poets is however characterised by good sense and is fairly correct. But the picture of the modern Bengali Society and of the moral and religious influences at work there is one-sided, unreal and exaggerated. Prolixity is the besetting vice of the writer and the book should have been compressed within much narrower limits.

Attempts to show that Kai-varttas who live by agriculture belong to the Māhishya caste, who are the original Vāisya and must not be confounded with their name-sake who live by fishery and are Sudras. This being so, the Brahmans, who act as Purohitas or priests of the Māhishya caste, cannot be regarded as having lost their social status in consequence.	590
July 5th	215	16mo d.cr	1st...	1,000	ditto ...	1 0 0	The author Calcutta.	Is a lucid and thoughtful analysis of the story of Sāvitrī, as told in the Mahābhārata. The fundamental conception of Hindu marriage, the moral and religious ideas which underlie Hindu marital relations, the duties and responsibilities of Hindu men and women in regard to propagation of species, and the characteristics of an ideal Hindu wife and daughter-in-law are among the subjects discussed in the book. The chapter discussing the supernatural element in the story of Sāvitrī, which attempts to find in her extraordinary spirituality the key-note of her character and conduct is the most important in the book. The book is marked by sound sense, good logic and a sincere desire, on the part of the author, to bring back his countrymen to the old and superior ideal of life and conduct from which they have of late been falling away.	591

The book is divided into two parts of which the first is directed against the establishment of the proposed Ráj Kumár College in Bengal and the second discusses the defects and short-comings of the existing system of University education. In the opinion of the writer, the establishment of a college only for pupils from aristocratic families, will tend to create an estrangement between the aristocracy and the great mass of the people, and otherwise defeat the object which its projectors have at heart.
